

BMJ Sexual & Reproductive Health is an international journal that promotes evidence-informed practice for contraception, abortion and all aspects of sexual and reproductive health.

The journal publishes research papers, topical debates and commentaries to shape policy, improve patient-centred clinical care, and to set the stage for future areas of research.

Jointly owned by BMJ and the Faculty of Sexual & Reproductive Healthcare (FSRH)

Editor-in-Chief: Professor Sharon Cameron,
University of Edinburgh, UK

Call for Papers on SRH Care during COVID-19

The journal is seeking submissions on selected topics related to COVID-19 for rapid, high-quality, peer-reviewed publication.

Relevant topics may include:

- Delivery of SRH services (e.g. abortion/post-abortion care, contraception)
- Meeting the SRH needs of specific populations or groups (e.g. young, vulnerable, minority groups, those at risk of GBV)
- New models or settings for SRH care (e.g. telemedicine, outreach)
- Threats and opportunities for SRH as a result of COVID-19

For more information, please visit srh.bmj.com.

Why submit?

- Streamlined submission process and rapid turnaround times
- Circulation to over 17,000 UK SRH professionals and global online reach
- Discoverable via PubMed, Web of Science, Scopus and other key databases
- Additional promotion for your work via our digital channels

Follow BMJ Sexual & Reproductive Health via Twitter, Facebook and the blog

